

From the Editor

This issue of Florya Chronicles of Political Economy includes five interesting research articles.

The first article is also drawing its case from the continent of Africa by Ahmed Ali DARAR, who focuses on an main goal sought in the article is to demonstrate that implementing an effective internal control system on the purchase and account payable cycle will emphasize the protections against risks. The search is about the Telecommunication Business Case Study of Djibouti Telecom. This study shows that approving purchase orders without consulting the service budget creates an important problem in terms of lack of transparency of the image for the company's accounting transaction and the treasury operation during the control.

The second article by Abshir MUHUDIN HASSAN which focuses on The Impact of Entrepreneurship Education on Entrepreneurial Intention University Students in Somalia. This article focuses on identify the impact of entrepreneurship education on the entrepreneurial intention of university students in Somalia. Article says that, taking entrepreneurship courses at university had improved student's entrepreneurial intention. More practical classroom-based lessons are needed to increase students' practical knowledge of entrepreneurship.

The following article by Nevra BAKER focuses on the evolution of leadership in time, ranging from the trait approach which is one of the earliest approaches to leadership to transformational leadership which counts as one of the most recent. In the article, the author emphasizes the similarities and differences between eight different approaches to leadership and discusses the contribution of each leadership style to the leadership literature in terms of the way it is differentiated from the previously discussed leadership style.

The fourth article by Faruk HADZIC, presents a theoretical, analytical, and ethical examination of B&H political economy, Constitutional "protection of vital national interests," and its effects on human security -socioeconomic conditions. The phenomenon of vital national interest and a theoretical and practical question focused on a constitutionally conditioned political point of view, not on economic, human security, legislative, peace & conflict dynamics, and normative framework. The author draws attention to the structurally manipulative and nepotistic ethnopolitical processes and the idiom "protection of vital national interests" demonstrate the institutionalization of post-war ethnoreligious conflict. Hadzic emphasizes that this reduces the rule of law framework, the country's integrity, sociopolitical, economic, and critical human security progression. The ethnoreligious conflict of "vital national interest" undermines the country's economic system.

The final paper is by GUNGOR and GUNEY, the aim of this study is to examine the multidimensional changes brought by the wave of globalization and to seek answers to the questions of who and in what direction these changes are used. The study gains importance in terms of drawing the factual framework of the status quo in the international system and making sense of the impact of the global system in the individual sphere. A result of the study; it has been concluded that cultural imperialism's being based on a capital basis causes cultural uniformization to begin to decentralize. With the competition in the international order and the increase in the international representation in local cultures, the reverse colonization wave has begun to gain strength in the face of the perception of globality created today. It has been reached to the findings that the hegemonic period of today's globalization being of western origin has come to an end.
